VIELMETTER LOS ANGELES

Four days ago I cried. Two days ago I expressed my needs. Last month I was ghosted and felt sad and confused. Last night I was generous and it made me feel good. This morning I took a cold shower and breathed deeply through the discomfort. This afternoon I texted a friend and asked how they were doing. Last month I was in fear that collectors would stop buying my art and I would run out of money. This week I felt grateful and secure. On Tuesday night I pressed my body against the body of somebody I care for and felt whole. This morning I meditated. Last night I got excited for something in the future. Yesterday before sunset I lit two candles and said a prayer. This afternoon I thought of the trauma of soldiers who go to war. Last Sunday I looked at my daughter and felt profound love. Last week I helped a friend move a crate. Last night I weighed myself and felt paunchy. On Thursday I put my hands on my chest and comforted myself because I was scared. Last year I made a bad financial decision and felt stupid. Three days ago I prayed. On Monday I road my bike up a hill until my legs hurt and my lungs burned. On Wednesday I missed my mother and thought I would trade everything to have her hold me once more. Yesterday I empathized with somebody I care for who was feeling pain. An hour ago I thought I was a good person and that people like me. Two hours ago I felt ashamed and second guessed myself. Last night I took a call from a friend and offered them reassurance. Very late last night I felt content. Last Saturday I paid for a dinner I shouldn't have and regretted it after. Later that evening I masturbated. Just now I made somebody laugh. A few minutes ago I thought about my ex and felt abandoned and unloved. A minute after I thought about my daughter and smiled.
