Nara Roesler presents a selection of works by Jonathas de Andrade from his latest series of Jangadeiros e Canoeiros (Raftsmen and Canoeists) and sculptures by Marcelo Silveira crafted from Cajacatinga wood. Both artists are informed by their roots in the Brazilian North East.

In his most recent body of work, De Andrade explores two distinct regional sailing cultures: the raftsmen navigating the Atlantic on traditional wooden vessels and the canoeists of the São Francisco River. These are living traditions shaped by the tensions between heritage, tourism, and modern economies. Silveira, also hailing from the Northeast, works with Cajacatinga wood—a nearly extinct species of the Atlantic Forest—transforming its remnants into delicate, highly aesthetic creations that subtly expose the predatory context of their origin.

As Silveira and De Andrade are particularly aware of their artistic predecessors, their dialogue is anchored by two historical punctuations: Hélio Oiticica's Metaesquema (1958) and an untitled work by Tomie Ohtake (1977). As major figures of Brazilian late modernism, Oiticica — whose language De Andrade refers to in Canoeist Meta-schemes 5: Black, sailing Hélio Oiticica — and Ohtake — a master of organic abstraction in Brazil — challenge geometric precision and predictability in these works. They introduce variation, rhythm, and a distinct expressivity to their compositions, allowing organic movement to thrive even within the confines of geometric forms.

The boom has the text "DEUS TE AMA" written on it in black, bold, capital letters. The background shows a clear blue sky with some clouds and a greenish-blue sea. The boat's deck is visible at the bottom, showing some ropes and hardware.

Part of a research commissioned by the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, at the invitation of Catherine Troiano, curator of the Photography Department, Jonathas de Andrade's works from Jangadeiros e Canoeiros (Raftsmen and Canoeists) is an ongoing series, with works in different formats focused on the bodily gestures and collective labor of bringing a jangada to and from the sea—a centuries-old ritual now entangled with tourism along Maceió's contested coastline. The work contrasts with idyllic imagery often used to market the region, evoking the anonymity and resilience of lives shaped by Brazil's colonial legacy.

A fundamental element of the series is the sails that the artist collected from working rafts, each hand-painted with advertisements, one of the jangadeiros' main income for decades. De Andrade folds the sails into rectangles, silkscreens the fishermen's faces onto the now-abstract surfaces, and preserves traces of the original painting. By replacing commercial logos with the individuals who labor beneath them, the artist reclaims space for visibility and dignity.

The small sculptures from the series Regata de Cores sobre o Rio São Francisco (Color Regatta on the São Francisco River), are composed of paintings on fragments of lacquered wood, which recreate, in sculptural form, the graphics of the boats from the São Francisco River canoe race, featured in the film Jangadeiros e Canoeiros. Another development from this series are the abstract compositions created from photographic cutouts, which echo Hélio Oiticica's Metaesquemas (1950/1960s), merging popular design with modernist abstraction.

Among the works featured is Metaesquema (1958), by Hélio Oiticica, considered one of the most compelling developments in constructive art. Produced at a moment when this language was gaining momentum in Brazil and across Latin America, the Metaesquemas conceive geometry not as a rigid, self-contained structure, but as something vibrant, alive, and, to some extent, unstable. Precarious balances, perpendicular planes, oscillating forms, and an open organization— — inflected with a certain dose of humor— — characterize the artist’s poetics during this period, already pointing toward a break with the orthogonal rigor of the concrete tradition.

A central figure in Brazilian abstract art is Tomie Ohtake, also included in this selection with a work from the late 1970s. Of Japanese origin but based in Brazil, the artist combined geometry with lyricism and gesture in her compositions, often creating nuances of light and color, smoky brushstrokes, and suggestive elements — at times more defined, at others more diffuse. In Untitled (1977), sinuous forms that seem to evoke the organic world coexist with a more regular structure that acts as both axis and counterpoint, tensioning balance and fluidity.

This relationship between form and organicity reappears in the work of Marcelo Silveira. In works such as Peles and Sementes, Silveira investigates the characteristics of cajacatinga — a wood native to Brazil’s coastal Atlantic Forest —, testing the limits of its plasticity, sculpting it, wearing it out, and creating lines of resistance on its surface. In Pernambuco, where the artist lives and works, cajacatinga has been extensively logged to open land for the construction of sugar mill equipment since the colonial period, and is now almost extinct, with mostly only roots remaining, themselves burnt successively during seasonal fires. Silveira collects such fragments, creating works that give the remnants new forms and purposes.

If, in Ohtake, form is permeated by gesture and atmosphere, oscillating between definition and dissolution, in Silveira, it is anchored in materiality, acquiring weight, density, and historical depth. In both cases, however, form does not present itself as a closed system, but as a field of tension: shaped either by light and painterly gesture, or by the resistance of the material and its accumulated uses. It is in this passage — from surface to matter, from lyricism to structure — that abstraction approaches an experience that is at once sensorial and concrete.

lives and works in Recife, Brazil

Jonathas de Andrade's artistic practice is mainly centered in photography, film, and installation. By often involving local communities in the construction of his work, the artist is able to expand the reach of constantly marginalized voices. De Andrade's work seeks to continuously rewrite historical narratives by intertwining fiction and documentary, creating allegories and poetic approaches that operate as potent tools for questioning gender, class, and race constructs rooted in Brazilian socio-cultural paradigms.

'I think that an artistic existence -which is not a privilege reserved to professional artists, nor is it always guaranteed to them—is related to a state of attention and urgency, that must be nurtured and be given space. That, in addition to having an aesthetic sensibility towards life. For that matter an understanding of art as an isolated field is ultimately uninteresting. [...] I see art's strength in its ability to generate energy through absolute contradiction and disarray within a system; through its ability to use checkmates as impulses for movement and transformation, rather than seeing them as insurmountable ambushes.'

helio oiticica

b. 1937, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil

d. 1980, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil

One of the most influential Brazilian artists of the second half of the 20th century, Hélio Oiticica began his career as a painter and progressively strayed into a more ephemeral, dynamic, performance-oriented oeuvre which culminated with large-sized installations. His intense artistic output was constantly accompanied by prolific, razor-sharp reflections on the directions of contemporary art. He participated actively in the Concrete movement as a member of collective Grupo Frente (1955–56) but, starting in the late 1950s, as he became affiliated with Grupo Neoconcreto (1959), he felt a need to free himself up from bidimensionality and started creating more radically sensorial, interactive artwork.

Thus were born the Relevos and Núcleos espaciais series, the early instances of a research on color and space that would eventually lead up to the creation of the Bólides and especially Penetráveis, large-scale installations which would lead him to be invited to exhibit at the Whitechapel, in London (in the famous 1969 show Eden). Controversial and irreverent, he has always championed the poetical and ethical richness of marginalized forms of life (“Seja marginal, seja herói” [Be an outsider, be a hero]), which translated into pulsating works such as his Parangolés, which are probably the most direct and concise example of his aspiration to merge art and life.

tomie ohtake

b. 1913, Kyoto, Japan

d. 2015, São Paulo, Brazil

One of the main representatives of abstract art in Brazil, Tomie Ohtake was born in Kyoto in 1913, and moved to Brazil in 1936. Her career as an artist began in the 1950s under the guidance of Japanese artist Keiya Sugano. After an initial phase focused on figurative studies in painting, she began to explore the abstract. During this period, she created a series of works known as “blind paintings”, in which she painted blindfolded. This practice was suggested by the critic Mário Pedrosa, one of the main theoreticians of the Brazilian neo-concrete movement, emphasizing sensitivity and intuition in his practice.

In her paintings from the mid-1970s through the 1980s, Ohtake developed a distinctive and unparalleled style of figural abstraction. Her magnificent works, characterized by round, organic forms that fill the visual field, are rendered with subtle gradations of hue and monochromatic expanses. Through this, she transformed the legacy of Brazilian modernism into one of the most eloquent repertoires of late-modern painting in the Americas. It was during this period that Ohtake’s work took on a cosmic dimension, driving her transition towards sculpture and real space.

marcelo silveira

b. 1962, Gravatá, Brazil

lives and works in Recife, Brazil

Marcelo Silveira's questions and challenges long-established categories related to art, such as sculpture, folk art, craftwork and collecting. His works often depart from the idea of materiality and how anything can become a medium, spearheading his use of wood, leather, paper, metal, plastic and glass amongst many other materials. Silveira's investigation also addresses the idea of the use and purpose of materials or objects, which he suggests can be defined by a common, socially determined repertoire—as is the case for bottles or glasses—and uprooted by recreating familiar shapes using unexpected materials.

Additionally, the concept of collecting is central to the artist's practice, with a constant play between production and appropriation. Silveira addresses the question in numerous ways, whether it be by presenting an accumulation of found artifacts such as postcards, rulers or perfume bottles, by incorporating un-usable domestic utensils, or by showcasing his work as an assemblage, whereby each part is a fragment of a whole. Organization, or arrangement is therefore a fundamental aspect of the artist's work, not only in terms of exhibiting strategically, but also as an instrument for re-defining and reformulating his materials.
